5 Areas To Repaint First To Update Your Home

1. The Main Living Area

The main living area offers the biggest visual return because it's where you and your guests spend the most time. In open-layout homes, repainting this space can refresh the feel of multiple connected areas at once.

2. The Kitchen

Kitchens accumulate wear, fast food spatters, faded colors, and dated cabinet finishes, which can make the whole room feel tired. Repainting the walls and cabinet surfaces can transform the space without the cost of a full renovation.

3. The Entryway and Main Hallways

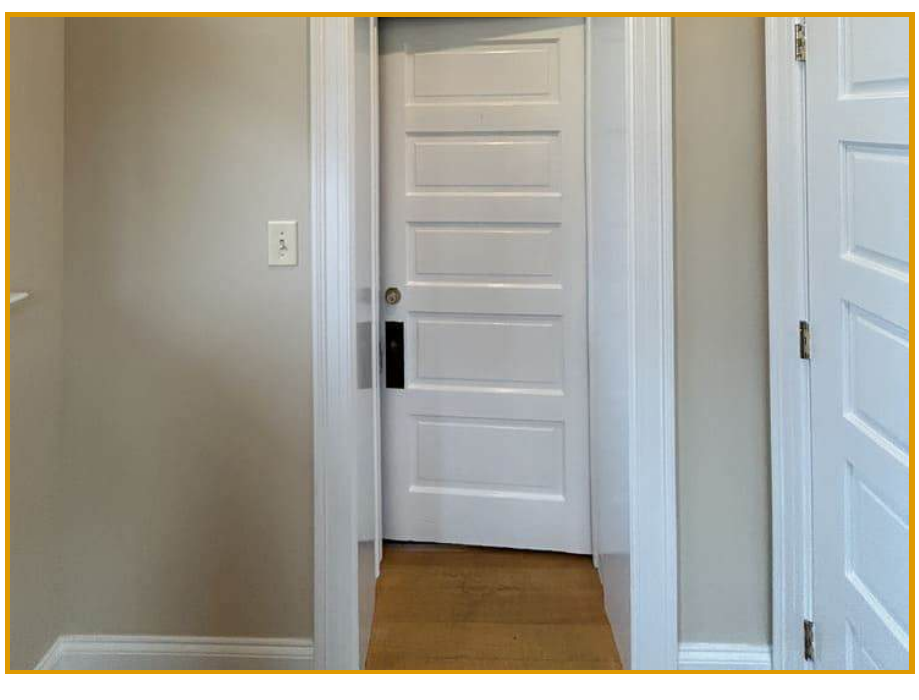
Entryways and hallways form the first and lasting impression of a home, yet they collect scuffs, hand marks, and chipped trim faster than most rooms. Freshening these spaces makes the entire house feel more polished and well-maintained.

4. The Primary Bedroom

The primary bedroom shapes the daily experience of living in a home, and builder-grade or outdated paint colors can make it feel impersonal. Repainting it creates a calmer, more intentional space that's also one of the more straightforward rooms to update.

5. Trim and Doors

Yellowed baseboards, worn door casings, and chipped trim can age a room even when the wall color is in good shape. Clean, sharp trim makes a room look finished and supports the wall color with a more cared-for overall appearance.



Presented by:
GildedPainting.com